Lāna'i Pineapple Festival (Lāna'i) — Since James Dole's purchased the island of Lāna'i in 1922 to grow pineapple, the sweet and juicy fruit has evolved into an iconic symbol of the Hawaiian Islands. While the majority of Lāna'i's pineapple production shut down in the late 1980s — only about 100 acres remain today to supply enough fruit for local consumption — the island still celebrates its rich history as Hawai'i's Pineapple Island each summer with the Lāna'i Pineapple Festival. Be sure to come hungry to enjoy pineapple eating contests, pineapple-cooking competitions, and food booths showcasing tasty island eats. For more information, visit LanaiPineappleFestival.com.
